

Writer publishes book of childhood adventures

Elizabeth II, was in the country at the time and you can't get anyone more famous than her. We mailed her the leaf and got a letter back from her saying thanks. We sent leaves to the Queen of Denmark, the king and queen of Norway and Sweden and the king of Spain. We even sent one to the pope (John Paul II) and asked him to bless the island from the leaf. We received an apostolic blessing from him, and that was pretty neat. Those letters are included in the book."

The interesting thing about Tidridge is that the only time he ever journalled was while he was on canoe trips. At that point, he wasn't a writer by any means, just a young boy keeping track of the various adventures he took.

He first started writing his book while he was in university with the help of one of his professors. What started as a project to preserve his memories of the dozens of canoe trips soon turned into something much bigger.

While preserving his memories in the written form, he found himself bumping into the real history of the islands and areas he visited many years ago. He reached out to local historians, including Fred Hopcraft, Allan Trussler and Scott Shipman, editor of the popular book called English Bloods. Award-winning, international author Kathy Eldon, whose son Dan was a huge hero of Tidridge's when he was a boy, endorsed Beyond Mainland with the quotation that reads: 'An extraordinary story that reveals not only the identity of a 'long-lost land,' but also that of the story-teller, a gifted writer who reminds us that the journey is truly the destination.'

It was through his conversations with the local history buffs that Tidridge was able to learn many unique historical facts about the places he visited as a child. It was important to Tidridge that his book include facts about Muskoka's native history, so he spoke to natives from Muskoka's first nations communities.

"I got so many stories from other people, I've gone through multiple revisions, encountered different people along the way," he said. "This is something I've wanted to do for years. As I was getting older, some of those stories and maps were disappearing. I realized I didn't canoe as much or visit the cottage as much as I used to as a boy. This is my way of trying to preserve my childhood."

As a way to pay tribute to one of the first canoe trips he took from Buck Lake to Huntsville, Tidridge is having a book signing at The Bookcase on May 16.

"I think the local history is really important to people," he said. "I think, as Canadians, preserving our history is something we're not really good at. It definitely feels like something I was supposed to do and I'm very happy it's done before starting a family. The book definitely has a Canadian feel to it."
